Dear questionized

In the beginning of June you received a questionnaire which focused on cultural agreements' tendency to vanish. You may have forgotten it but we haven't.

In the end of July you received a reminder for the questionnaire's deadline. You may have forgotten it but we haven't.

In August some of those who was invited to answer our questions received a tiny reward. They have hardly forgotten it. Either have we.

In August we were called up for the recently established embassy of Cuba in Oslo to explain our project. We haven't forgotten the pleasant meeting but chargé d'affaires seems to have.

We haven't even forgotten promises about invitations to a party at the embassy, an early answering to our questionnaire or the advice about cultural agreements and how they easily disappear if one is asking too eagerly after them.

In anticipation of the questionnaire and our search for the cultural agreement between Norway and Cuba to have global political consequences, which it now finally has, even in excess of the artistic limits, our work has been rather postponed for a while. It isn't any longer. Just have a look at the astonishing progress at www.institutors.org/cuba

The news telling that Norway and Cuba recently have started to negotiate about refreshing old agreements are showing us that the time has come to resume our work. Through our activities we are striving to reach the highest level of imaginary truthseeking. Therefor a penetrating and a widely spreading understanding of both method, object and subject is an urgent necessity. Based on these needs we have engaged F.A.Q.-factory to make an evaluating pamphlet which will reveal the imaginary potential, relevance and irrelevance of both the questionnaire, the questionaired and the questionaized. Be kind to answer the questions and solve the tasks in the evaluating pamphlet and return it to us within the end of this year. As a reward you will receive a new evaluating pamphlet without having to pay the costs of the first one. (See the back of the pamphlet.)

Good luck!

With friendly regards from
